They helped Lord Temple back to the sofa, continued Pratt, first of all, trying to make him drink some brandy. A tumbler half full of the neat spirit had been left by somebody on the mantlepiece, and they held it to his lips. I think he swallowed a little, but the rest went on to the front of his clothes. Beautiful diamond studs he had in his shirt that night! But were you in the room, during this? cried Mr. St. George. I was in the seat that I tell you of, sir, and had not moved from it; and, from an angle, I could see most of what was going on. It is a crimson velvet chair, low and small, standing against the wall at the back of the refreshment table, and anybody, sitting in it, would not be noticed by those at the play tables. If you go to the place this very night, there you Il see the chair. Mr. Si George thought he would rather he excused the errand. Proceed, said he. Major Anketel reached the pen and ink, and Swallowtail took a piece of paper from his pocket-book. I think the date will be just the ticket, said Swallowtail, with that knowing wink he emits from his sharp, black eyes. It...
